expressed your dismay that everything is not being opened immediately. I want to lay out for you our decision-making process.

Earlier this week, in advance of Governor Herbert's announcement of Utah moving from the Red to Orange phase of his recovery plan, I met with Salt Lake County Mayor Jenny Wilson and Gary Edwards of the Salt Lake County Health Department and his staff, to discuss the status of COVID19 infections in Millcreek. We also met with Mayor Erin Mendenhall of Salt Lake City, Mayor Cheri Wood of South Salt Lake City and City Administrator Wayne Pyle of West Valley City. These cities and, to a lesser extent Millcreek, have been the hardest hit by the Corona virus in Salt Lake County.

Together, we assessed the data that has been gathered by the experts in the county and state health departments.

We learned that within Salt Lake County, we now have in place the capabilities for 11,000 tests/week, 130 employees and summer interns are devoted to contact-tracing for infected people, and our communities have ample capacity to provide hospital beds and ventilators to those who need them.

We reviewed the criteria public health scientists are using to measure and evaluate the spread of COVID19 and the progress in our county that is the rate of spread of this disease. Additionally, we reviewed information about where the cases are coming from in Millcreek and the fact that of active infections in our city, the large majority of them are traced to care centers and group living situations, as opposed to single or multifamily residences.

While Millcreek has two zip codes (84106 and 84109) that have experienced a higher number of infections than other areas in Salt Lake County, two-thirds of those infected have recovered already. Further, the infection rate in these zip codes is not as high as areas in the other cities identified above.

The data suggests that we have slowed the community spread as well as the rate of new infections. Our experts have determined that in our county, the rate of transmission has been slowed from the original 1:4.6 persons to a daily average of between 1:1.3 to 1:1.8 persons. That means that infected individuals are isolating and infecting fewer other individuals. While this rate is still not the ideal 1:1, it shows significant improvement.

The rate of positive testing has stabilized at 5%. This means of every 100 persons being tested, only 5% are testing positive. We have slowed the spread of instances of the disease from a rate of doubling every 4.5 days to our current status, where it would take more than 17 days for the number of instances to double. This is good progress, and it is thanks to YOU for your efforts to stay home, social distance and wash hands.

According to our public health experts, it is appropriate and safe to move from the tightest restrictions to a stage of caution for vulnerable persons, while we allow more activity for others, so long as hand washing, wearing of masks in public and strict social distancing practices continue to be observed. These recommendations will be followed by Salt Lake County as well as the more impacted communities of Salt Lake City, South Salt Lake City and West Valley City. Millcreek will follow them also, based upon the data we are seeing about our community.

This decision has not been made lightly. I am well-aware of the risk that this virus could still spread and people will die from it. I am also aware of the adverse impacts the “stay home” restrictions have had; and those impacts are not only inconvenient or economic -- they can be life-threatening for families who have lost their employment and can no longer afford health care to treat serious problems unrelated to COVID 19 (to mention just one such impact).

I know this pandemic has made us fearful and the impacts and risks are real no matter how we act. At bottom, each of us should assess our own vulnerability and understand that the largest cohort of hospitalized patients in Utah is between 30-40 years old. We are all at some risk and this disease can be deadly even for younger, healthier folks. We will each make our own decisions about how we choose to act in response to loosening the restrictions and whether we are comfortable returning to re-opened businesses. Still given the data, local and state leaders agree that it is time to guardedly relax restrictions and begin to move to a new normal.

I ask for your cooperation to follow the new guidelines, and I also ask for your understanding. These decisions are fraught with responsibility. We are trying to do our best with the available data, relying on science and balancing inimical harms.

I cannot stress enough that our success in avoiding a relapse and a return to more draconian restrictions depends upon ALL OF US continuing to be smart-wearing masks in public, social distancing, washing hands, avoiding large gatherings and protecting our most vulnerable. New guidelines are being issued to establish how we will need to behave in this gradual reopening of our society. We are resolute to return to stricter measures if this disease begins to get away from us. The way to insure that does not happen is for all of us to follow the rules. Thank you for your help.

-- Mayor Jeff Silvestrini

Millcreek's Storm Drain "Wild West Mystery"

Storm drains around Millcreek fail often, like this one the City recently dug up on Hillside Lane. They are almost always emergencies to fix, and funds must be taken from other road projects.

The City Council is considering joining many other Utah cities that rely on storm drain utility fees to solve this problem.

Keep an eye out here for opportunities for public input on a storm drain utility fee.

Tuesday

May 5th

A Message from United Way of Salt Lake:

The COVID-19 pandemic is leaving its mark on communities all over the world. Here along the Wasatch Front, we're not only seeing the toll it's taking on our health and safety, but also on our friends and neighbors' ability to meet their basic needs.

These new obstacles facing our community and others across the world are why organizations are coming together for a second Giving Tuesday. Next Tuesday, May 5, will be a collective day of giving specifically targeted at COVID-19 response efforts.

United Way of Salt Lake's direct response is aimed at leveraging our powerful community partnerships to address the immediate and long-term effects the pandemic will have on kids and families across the Wasatch Front.

Here are some of the ways we are working with partners to help Utahns during and after this pandemic:

- We are working with our financial stability partnerships to demystify the rental assistance guidelines here in Utah and make sure tenants are getting the support they need.
- Our team is helping school partnerships to make sure kids and families are getting access to distance learning resources, basic needs resources, and staying connected with their school communities.
- We are supporting the state's efforts to offer emergency childcare for essential workers (first responders and health care) and create a stabilization program for the rest of the child care sector.

Now more than ever, we must come together to help our community through and past these difficult circumstances. Join us in supporting our friends and neighbors through and past this pandemic by donating to United Way of Salt Lake on Giving Tuesday.

For more information on how United Way of Salt Lake is supporting our community during COVID-19, click HERE.

Extra bonus: Every Giving Tuesday Now gift to the Best Friends Animal Sanctuary is triple-matched, so your generosity will go three times as far!
