UPDATE ON MILLCREEK'S OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED PARLEYS CANYON GRAVEL MINE

MILLCREEK. Millcreek continues to oppose the proposed Parleys Canyon gravel mine. The latest effort was an opposition the city filed on July 27 to issuance of an air quality permit. Click

Or join virtually HERE

HERE to go to the city website where you can find Millcreek's letter of opposition and its supporting detail.

The City's letter was supported by an analysis from Dr. Ron Sahu, an expert commissioned by the city and other donors. The report supports the conclusion that the preliminary intent of the Utah Division of Air Quality to issue a permit is misguided and unsupported by relevant air quality data. Other exhibits to the letter are a fugitive dust study that the city commissioned and the SWPPP Revision Application from Granite Construction. All of these supporting details can be found HERE.

Opposition to the permit was also filed by other entities and individuals, including Salt Lake County Mayor Jenny Wilson, Utah Physicians for a Healthy Environment, Save Our Canyons, among others. It has been reported that DAQ received some 1,400 comments in opposition to issuing an air quality permit for the mine.

Millcreek's opposition letter is technical, as it must be to gain traction with an agency that operates upon the analysis of technical air quality considerations. The city is committed to protecting the health and property of Millcreek residents, particularly those living in the Canyon Rim neighborhood, by doing everything legally possible to prevent the permitting of this potentially horrific mining operation.
